Not illustrated. 1893 Excerpt: .is that which, upon full deliberation, we ought to choose; whether the franchise should be 1864 WORKING-MEN AND THE FRANCHISE. 191 founded on ratepaying or on occupation; neither will I consider whf hcr or not there should be a lodgers franchise. I put aside every question except the very simple one which I take to be at issue, and on this I will endeavour not to be misunderstood. I apprehend my honourable friend s Bill to mean (and if such be the meaning, I give my cordial concurrence to the proposition) that there ought to be, not a wholesale, nor an excessive, but a sensible and considerable addition to that portion of the working-classes--at present almost infinitesimal--which is in possession of the franchise I apprehend that I am correct in saying that those who possess the franchise are less than one-fifteenth of the whole number of the working-classes. Is that a state of things which we cannot venture to touch or modify? Is there no choice between excluding forty-nine out of every fifty working-men on the one hand, and on the other a domestic revolution ? Mr. Cave had made use of that phrase in moving the amendment We are told that the working-classes do not agitate for an extension of the franchise; but is it desirable that we should wait until they do agitate? In my opinion, agitation by the working-classes, upon any political subject whatever, is a tiling not to be waited for, not...
