Do you know how parents want to be involved in their children's education? Have you developed a plan at your school to work with parents? What three things would make your classroom more inviting? Do your personal beliefs and assumptions interfere with contacting parents? In I Send My Child to School! What More Do You Want?, Regenia Mitchum Rawlinson provides the information educators need to win parents support and confidence. Rawlinson also gives educators critical information about parental involvement and fostering positive home-school relationships. Rawlinson offers sensible and simple strategies to help educators engage parents the way they want to be involved. When parents and educators work together, student achievement increases.
